Thursday, December 11. 1707.

London, December 11.

THERE having been no perfect Account hitherto printed, of the Execution done upon the Enemy at Newfoundland by Commodore Underdown, in the Month of August last; 'tis presum'd the following particular Relation, being an exact Copy of that transmitted by Captain Underdown to his Royal Highness the Lord High Admiral, will be very acceptable to the Publick.

HAVING receiv'd Advice the Enemy had several Ships fishing to the Northward in several Harbours there, and that they might be easily burnt or taken; Upon this Advice the Commander of Ships, Masters, and Inhabitants of St. John's petition'd that we would sail in Order to attack them and destroy their Fishery, which they were of Opinion would be of great Encouragement to ours.

On the 26th of July I sail'd from St. John's with her Majesty's Ship Nonfuch, with Major Lloyd with 20 of his Soldiers aboard me, and 20 more on board the Nonfuch, it being his own Request for the good of the Service, and agreed to by a general Opinion. On the 27th we came before Bonavist, where I gave Captain Hughes Orders to sail in Company with me, there being no appearance of an Enemy there. On the 2d of August in the Evening, we stood into the Bay of Blanch till we came off of Flower de Luce Harbour, I sent in my Pinnace with Major Lloyd and my Lieutenant, with the Nonfuch's Pinnace, to look into the Harbour and see if there were any of the Enemy fishing there; which they did, but found none, only some Stages and other Necessaries relating to the Fishery, they having been us'd to fish there. About 4 the next Morning we stood away for Grand Canary; about 6 we came about the Cape; we saw a Ship, which, (after firing a few Shot at her which she return'd) struck: We sent our Boats aboard, and found her to be of St. Malo, of about 300 Tuns, 30 Guns, and 110 Men, call'd the Duke d' Orleans. And in another Arm of the Bay call'd Eguilette was another Ship: But the Place being rocky and Shoal-Water, my self nor the Nonfuch could not come near her: Whereupon I order'd the Medway's-Prize to go as close in as she could with safety, which she did within half Gunshot; and at the same time Captain Carleton, Major Lloyd, and my Lieutenant with our Boats well mann'd and arm'd, to land upon an Island which she lay under; which being done, after having fir'd several Broadfides, and her Company not being able to keep the Deck because gall'd by our Men from the Shore, she struck. She was a Ship of 20 Guns, and 70 odd Men, belong'd to St. Malo. But being inform'd by the Enemy that about three Leagues to the Northward in la Couche there were two Ships, 1 of 32 Guns and the other of 26, both of St. Malo, I gave Captain Hughes Directions to set her on Fire, and afterwards to joyn me at la Couche, my self and Nonfuch making the best of our Way thither. The 5th in the Afternoon we came into la Couche, where we found the 2 Ships in a Readiness for sailing: They fir'd some Broadfides at us, but as soon as we began to return them, they set their Ships on Fire and left them, going over to the next Harbour call'd Caroufe, which by Land was not above half a Mile, and in which we had Intelligence there were four Ships. We immediately weigh'd, and stood for the Harbour, and about 8 a Clock at Night were joyn'd by the Medway's-Prize; but it proving very little Wind at S. by W. and difficult getting out, it was about 8 next Morning before we got off the Harbour's-Mouth. I sent in my Boat, but found they had all got out to Sea; having by the advantage of the little Wind, and the great Number of Men and Boats cut and tow'd out. We stood to the Northward, saw several Ships, and gave Chace to them. About 5 in the Afternoon we came off the Harbour of St. Julian, where we saw a Ship, and having lost sight of the other Ships, stood in to the Harbour, and came to an Anchor in 26 Fathom Water. The Place where the Ship was hawl'd in being very narrow and shoal, I order'd the Medway's-Prize to go as near in as possibly she could. She fir'd two Guns, but 'twas our Opinion not to attack her till Morning being the 6th of August: At 4 a Clock Captain Carleton Major Lloyd and Lieutenant Eagle went in with all our Boats well mann'd and arm'd, and landing soon drove the Enemy (who were likewise landed) from their Post. We took their Boats and went aboard the Ship, where we found they had laid several Trains of Powder to burn or blow her up, which we timely discover'd and by Noon tow'd her out to Sea. But finding our Pilots not acquainted nor caring to go further to the Northward, it was our Opinion to sail back to Caroufe, and there to remain till the Duke of Orleans-Prize at grand Canary joyn'd us, which we left there with a Lieutenant and 60 Men to get her ready for the Sea; but in our Way to Caroufe, to look into Petit Maitre a Harbour where the French generally make up their Fleet; which we did and destroy'd their Boats, Fish-Stages, &c. About 7 at Night we came to an Anchor at Caroufe Harbour and moor'd: On the 12th and 13th it blew a hard Gale at S. W. Having destroy'd their Fishery there, the Duke of Orleans-Prize being come to la Couche on the 14th by 4 in the Morning, we weigh'd and stood out to Sea, taking her with us, Wind at E. by N. and made the best of our Way for St. John's, where my self and Nonfuch with the 2 Prizes arriv'd the 17th Instant, having before given the Medway's Prize Orders to make the best of her Way for Trinity. * Inclos'd is a Scheme of what Damages the Enemy may have receiv'd this Expedition, according to the nearest Computation we could make.
